3. How may I protect my privacy on the Internet and within Thai West website?

* Know the risks.

If you provide your e-mail address to public domains such as chat rooms or newsgroups, or you provide it to websites that don't respect your privacy, you may begin to receive unsolicited e-mail. Unsolicited e-mail is also known as spam. Although Thai West website has strict rules prohibiting spam and we do block certain known groups from sending unsolicited messages to Thai West website members, it is generally a good idea to provide your e-mail address only to people or groups that you trust.

* Educate yourself.

Look for a privacy statement on every site you visit on the Web, and search for information on how to protect your privacy.

* Tell your children, "Never talk to strangers!"

Teach children not to give out their names or other personal information. Tell them never to fill out online registration forms without your knowledge and consent.

* Use complex passwords.

If your password is simple, it is also simple for a hacker to break it and gain access to your e-mail account or other private areas. To protect your privacy, you should use complex passwords consisting of very long and awkward keystroke combinations. This makes the hacker's job much more difficult.
